

MISS BUNTING

The carefully observed separation of the old and the new social strata is upset when representatives of each come together in the sphere of Miss Bunting- the governess who has molded most of the country's upper class. Under Miss Bunting's tutelage, Anne, daughter of Sir Robert Fielding,...

Reader's Opinions

I don't think I'm going to continue reading Thirkell's books. She's lost the sparkle and wit I loved in her pre-war and early-war novels. Her characters now spend much of their time sitting around and talking openly about how lower class every one is these days. It may have been how she...

This 14th entry in Angela Thirkell's Barseshire series had a lot of references to the Trollope series, especially in the families - the Frank Greshams and the Dales in particular. While knowing the Trollope series isn't required to enjoy this novel, it does add a spice to the storyline revolving about Mr. Adams of Hoglestock. Although...
