Reader's Opinions

We live in amazing times. For the majority of those of us who live in America, we have vast reservoirs of free time. But how do we choose to use that free time? Sadly, for the last fifty years, we have spent most of it passively watching television, watching television to the exclusion of other more social, more fulfilling activities....

The main premise that Clay Shirky makes is human beings have moved from a place where they spend most of their free time consuming to a place where we can both produce and consume. It's inspiring to think about the possibilities that collective intelligence provides. Digital technology is making collaboration possible on a large scales...
