

LAUGH LINES

Ben Bova, best-selling and award-winning author of the "Grand Tour" and "Asteroid Wars" series, takes a sardonic look at the humorous possibilities of future technology. The Starcrossed: Bill Oxnard, a young technological genius, had perfected true three-dimensional television, making ordinary TV obsolete. He thought he would be rich and famous -- but he hadn't realized how deranged the executives running the industry were; nor what sort of programs they were planning to broadcast using the new process in the maniacal quest for ratings. Cyberbooks: Carl Lewis...

Reader's Opinions

Uch. I couldn't get through even the first story of this book. Not only is it not funny, it's just plain awful. But what really made me slam the book shut and vow to take it back to the library post-haste is that it's RIFE with typos. I couldn't take it any more. For example, "he heaved a great sight." One story, titled "The Supersonic..."

Well, it was supposed to be funny, and I guess it was mildly entertaining, but that's as far as I would go. Contains 2 longer novellas and some short stories. The first novella, Starcrossed, was sort of fun, but the last one I didn't really finish, just skimmed it. My favorite story was 'The Great Moon Hoax,' which...
