

DOMESTIC VIOLETS

Tom Violet always thought that by the time he turned thirty-five, he'd have everything going for him. Fame. Fortune. A beautiful wife. A satisfying career as a successful novelist. A happy dog to greet him at the end of the day. The reality, though, is far different. He's got a wife, but their problems are bigger than he can even imagine. And he's written a novel, but the manuscript he's slaved over for years...

Peek Inside the Book

I know nothing, I say, cheerfully. You never seem to. Have you ever wondered why that is? It's very deliberate. I've found that knowledge is usually a burden. I prefer to be surprised and then eventually horrified. Matthew Norman,...

You look good," I tell my reflection. "Hot?" But this last part comes out with a question mark at the end. I've never been good at sales. Matthew Norman, Domestic Violets //

Reader's Opinions

This had its moments. I love it when a book makes me laugh. The parts about the corporate workplace were the best. There are times when I ask my husband to tell me the latest corporate bullshit jargon and it never disappoints (buy-in, core values, drinking the Kool-Aid, move the needle, we'll park that,...

I love Tom Violet. I love his personality, his love of family and his ability to use sarcasm to his advantage, mainly towards people he doesn't care for. Not since Jess Riley's DRIVING SIDEWAYS have I enjoyed such snarkiness. Granted, he uses the snarkiness to make up for his lack of confidence, but he does it in...
