Reader's Opinions

This is a heart-rendering story that addresses social issues that are epidemic in our schools - the influence of the 'mean girl phenomenon', bullying, teen depression and suicide. Adeline is a seventh grader who runs for a class office against her best friend. Adeline wins the election and her former best friend, a sore...

School bullying, and childhood or teenage bullying in general, are difficult to deal with regardless of the era in which the events occur. This book resonated with me because, like so many others, I experienced years of bullying in much the same way as Adeline, the main character in this novel. The fact that the story is told from the...
